Folders help you organize content in your class. This article explains when to use folders, and how to create a folder.

Organizing Content: Folders vs Learning Modules

You can organize course content into folders, and Learning modules.

There are key similarities between folders and Learning modules:

- Both are containers that allow documents, links, assignments, and other types of content to be stored inside of them.
- Both permit two levels of nesting.

There are also key differences between folders and learning modules:

- Learning modules cannot be placed inside folders or other Learning modules.
- Folders can be placed inside modules and other folders.
- Learning modules provide students with on-screen arrows that allow them to move to the next or go back to previous items.

When To Use Folders vs Learning Modules

Folders: Use folders when the items contained in that folder do not need to be viewed sequentially (ex: a series of links to different resources).

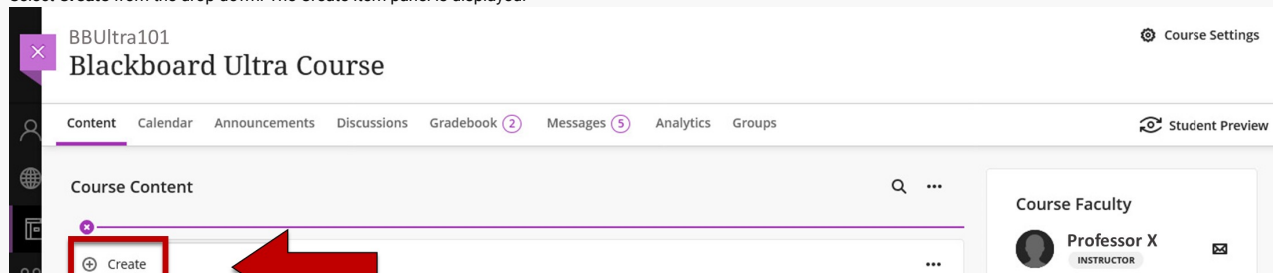

Learning modules: Use learning modules when you want students to work through content in sequence, such as a week's learning materials.
