Thanks to Megan Ewing for sharing this email from eCampusOntario:

The Open Library Open Educational Resources (OER) Rangers program is looking for educators and learning staff who are passionate about the benefits of OER and want to be part of the open education movement. You will receive training on open education and publishing tools, share your knowledge with your peers and receive a stipend of $5,000.

We are glad to announce that we are accepting applications for this opportunity through this survey until July 28 (this Friday!). For detailed information about the program and to confirm your eligibility, please visit this opportunity page.

On July 19, there was an information session where the Open Library team presented the program and answered questions about participating in this movement. Here is the recording of the session and presentation slides.
